Find Your Future Career

The Career Development process outlines the steps to follow to find your future career. Each step paves the way for the next and will help you make an informed career choice or affirm any decisions you have already made.

1. Conduct a Self-Assessment

When deciding on a major and a career path, it helps to understand yourself. Start by exploring the following areas:

- Interests – Make note of activities, hobbies and academic subjects you enjoy.
- Skills – Identify natural talents, acquired skills and academic activities in which you excel.
- Values – Clarify work-related factors and life-style preferences important for your career satisfaction.
- Personality – Discover your unique personal characteristics, work preferences, and decision-making style.

How to Implement Phase 1

- Consult with a career counselor regarding a comprehensive assessment of your interests, skills, values and personality style.
- Refer to Career Services' events and workshops for upcoming opportunities.
- Use online career guidance programs and assessments, and surveys recommended by us then, discuss the results with a career counselor.
- Take classes related to your field of interest. Get involved in the content!
- Identify & Develop skills through career-related employment and/or involvement in activities.

2. Explore Occupations

This phase of career development requires that you gather specific information on occupations that interest you, including education and training needed.

Step 1 Research occupations of interest & obtain the following information:

Nature of work involved, working conditions, education and training needed, job outlook and expected earnings, reported advantages and disadvantages and related occupations.

Step 2 Inquire about relevant education

Learn about specific majors, including the types of courses needed, knowledge gained from this major, and what skills will be developed.

Step 3 Get hands-on experience

Gain career-related experience to test out the career you’re considering. Participate in Cooperative Education or an internship, work as a volunteer, and/or join academic student organizations.
Choose a Career & Major

You should now be ready to use information from Phases 1 & 2 to determine career options and goals, and decide on a major.

Step 1: Create a list of several career fields & jobs within the field that interest you most Compile the list based on your self-assessment and occupational exploration. Example: Field—Psychology, Related jobs—recreation director, counselor, sales, case worker admissions rep, program coordinator, etc.

Step 2: Gather detailed information about each career field and job you’ve listed
Focus on gathering specific information that will let you determine how your values match up with the career fields & jobs. Example: description of daily activities, salary, geographic location requirements, etc.

Step 3: Narrow the list by identifying 2-5 of the most appealing career fields & jobs
Rank them based on information about yourself obtained from the Self-Assessment & Occupational Exploration phases.

Step 4: Re-examine your list periodically
Evaluate the career fields and jobs that seem to be the best fit for you.

Step 5: Decide on a career and then a major that supports your career choice

How to Implement Phase 3

Create a detailed decision-making plan.
Consult with a career counselor in Career Services about areas of indecision.
Plan ways to get career-related experience while speaking with a career counselor.
Continue informational interviews if necessary and get feedback from faculty, advisors, employers, family and friends about your plans.
Choose a career field and select a major that prepares you for your choice.
