Bridging the Gap: Research and Writing Strategies for Multilingual Scholars

Thurs. October 13th, 2022

4pm-5pm
SRB Murphy

International and other multilingual scholars may encounter unique challenges in the academic writing process, especially when it comes to publishing empirical research. In this workshop, attendees will be guided through key strategies for navigating these challenges, including developing an awareness of reader expectations, drawing on available resources and networks, and editing for grammatical clarity. By the end of this workshop, attendees will have learned about and practiced valuable skills for writing and revising research articles.

Sean Farrell is a doctoral student in the Linguistics and Applied Language Studies program. His research interests include second language writing, academic discourse socialization, and graduate student revision strategies. He currently heads the Multilingual Writing Center.

All Moffitt Postdocs, Research Scientists, and Grad Students are welcome.
