Going Global is a career and employment resources guide including more than 10,000 pages on constantly updating content on topics such as job search resources, work permits/visas regulations, resume writing guidelines and examples, employment trends, salary ranges, networking groups, and more.

USA Career Guides

Powered by Going Global, USA City Guides contain career and employment resources for the 40 largest metropolitan areas in the USA. Included in this database are: job search resources, employment outlook, professional networking groups, cost of living, major employer listings by industry sector, non-profits and volunteer opportunities. H1B employer listings are also listed for all 50 states.

Step 1: Conduct a Self-Assessment

Step 1: Know Yourself

Begin planning your career (or career change) with a self-assessment. Understanding your values and priorities, strengths, weaknesses, and workstyle will help determine your best career path and work environment.

What do you need to know?

Values and Priorities

Do you prefer to work in a team or as an individual? What type of compensation is most important to you? Do you want a flexible work place? Do you work best with direct supervision or hands-off management?

Strengths and Weaknesses

Having a clear understanding of your strengths will help you market yourself to employers. At which skills do you excel and which ones need improvement?

Career Expectations

What do you want out of a career? What field(s) interest you the most? Do you want to work for a large international firm or smaller family-owned business?

Activities and Interaction

How do you interact best with people? What is your learning style? Are you a team leader or team member?

Career Goals and Objectives

Understanding what you want and where you want to go will help you find the right job. Develop short-term (finish school, find an internship) and long-term (obtain a senior marketing position with a small company in the Tampa Bay area) goals, as well as action steps needed to achieve them.

Where do you find this information?

- Talk to people who know you well. Your family, friends, and co-workers can give great insight into your work personality, your values, and your skills.
- Use the web. A variety of self-assessment tools are available online.
- Use USF's resources. The Office of Employer Relations and the USF Career Services library have tools to assist with such assessments.

Step 2: Research Fields, Firms

An effective career plan goes beyond searching job openings. Create a target list of companies where you would like to work after you have researched the market, industries, and the community.

There are other reasons to do a little research early in your job search process because:

- Research will help you tailor your résumé and cover letter.
- Employers expect that you have some knowledge of their firm and industry prior to the interview.
- Advance research will help with salary and benefits evaluation and help determine growth opportunities.

What do you need to research?

Research Occupational Fields

Occupational research can help you determine if you need to change career fields, as opposed to simply changing employers. Such research can help you discover interest areas and jobs you may not know about, as well as help find entry-points. Occupational research will reveal details about advancement opportunities.

Research the Job Market

Research the job market to determine which companies and industries are hiring now. You might also determine salary ranges for the geographic markets you are considering.

Research Individual Companies

Your research should ultimately lead you to a target list of 15-20 companies. Learn about the company's leadership team, look at its financial statements (if available), and evaluate the benefits (both tangible and intangible) of working for each firm.

What do you need to know about your target companies?

- Products and/or services sold/produced.
- Ownership (publicly or privately owned), financial stability, whether the company is a subsidiary or a division of a national/international firm, location of firm's headquarters.
- Number of employees locally and corporate culture.
- Industry and company trends.
- The firm's major customers, competitors, and market position.

Where can you find this information?

- Online databases: LinkedIn and Glassdoor
- Print media: Fortune, BusinessWeek, American Business Journals, local newspapers
- Social media: Twitter, message boards
- Career resources: Industry guides
- Company websites: Annual reports, investor sites

Step 3: Develop a Career Action Plan

A Career Action Plan is very similar to a marketing plan, except in this case, the product is you. Key parts of a marketing plan include:

Target Position(s)

List the jobs you desire.

Situational Analysis

Similar to a business SWOT analysis, your personal analysis should list your key strengths and talents that might make you more marketable to employers. Think about the competencies and skills needed for your chosen career field and identify any skills gaps.

Brand/Position Statement

Summarize your past experiences and describe what is unique about your brand (you). Note your values, your interests, and your future goals.

Target Market

Detail the type of company you aim to work for, including geographic area, size, and corporate culture.

Strategy/Promotion

List the skills you will gain while in the MBA program. List specific career events and programs you will use to promote yourself and steps you will take to accomplish your career goals.

Sample Career Action Plan

Target Positions

Financial Analyst, Budget Analyst,
Business Operations Specialist

Situation Analysis

Key Strengths:

- Excellent analyzer: financial data, budgeting, business operations; able to analyze complex issues and resolve problems
- Recognized for positive work ethic
- Effective, experienced team member
- Excellent communication skills

Skills Gaps:

- Leadership, supervisory experience
- Specific industry experience
- Presentation skills

External Environment

The Tampa Bay area has a wide range of opportunities in the financial field. Several large organizations are headquartered here, and the overall economy is service-oriented. Within the next few years, service industries are expected to grow, which will create new job openings.

Brand/Position Statement

I am an enthusiastic, self-motivated professional with a strong desire to succeed in any position. In my work, I value integrity, variety, recognition, and a positive environment. I work best in a position that allows me to utilize my creativity and talents while contributing to the overall success of the organization. I am known for my interpersonal skills and my ability to communicate effectively. In my next role, I would like to be known as a savvy business leader who understands all financial aspects of a corporation and can interpret data efficiently and effectively.

Target Market

- Geographic area: all of Tampa Bay, including Tampa, Clearwater, St. Pete, Bradenton, Sarasota, Lakeland
- Industries: financial services, telecommunications, information technology, banking
- Size of organization: Fortune 100; multi-national scope
- Culture: high degree of integrity; involved in community and displays corporate social responsibility; encourages creativity

Target Companies

Raymond James	Tech Data
Jabil Circuit	Verizon
Bank of America	AT&T
AG Edwards	American Express
JPMorgan Chase	SunTrust
Franklin Templeton	Nielsen
Capital One	Morgan Stanley

Strategy/Promotion

1. Schedule an appointment with an MBA career counselor in the Office of Employer Relations to review goals.
2. Attend Graduate Business Association tailgate party to network with other MBA students.
3. Register with USF Career Connections and search the database weekly for open opportunities.
4. Read trade publications weekly to keep up-to-date on industries and trends.
5. Contact former co-worker who now works for Raymond James.
6. Talk with finance professor to discuss potential referrals.

Step 4: Craft a Résumé

Your résumé should convey your unique skills and talents and convince the reader that you are worthy of an interview. Frequently, outstanding candidates are overlooked because of a poor résumé.

Format

Most MBAs use a chronological or functional résumé (or a cross between the two). Most people use a chronological résumé, where job and educational experiences are listed separately in reverse order, when they want to advance in the same field.

A functional résumé may be more appropriate for those desiring to change fields. This format emphasizes skills over specific experience. Experience is included but is listed according to skill, rather than job; education is included but is in a separate section.

Document Settings

- Use a minimum .5" margin and at least 10 pt. font.
- Use standard, easy-to-read fonts such as Times New Roman or Arial.
- Ignore the one-page rule if you have significant work experience but do not exceed two pages.
- Use bold or underlining sparingly, just to provide emphasis. Do not overuse italics, which can be difficult to read.

Sections

- Contact information: Should be at the top of the résumé, easy to find and read.
- Qualifications summary: Catch the employer's attention with short, bulleted phrases noting specific skills and strengths that directly relate to the position.
- Professional experience: Describe work experience, but don't just describe what you did - detail the outcome. Demonstrate what you accomplished at each position, what you learned, and what you added to the company. Include relevant internships and part-time positions, too.
- Education: List degrees in reverse chronological order (do not include specific coursework unless you are applying for an internship).
- Other categories: Categories such as computer skills, international experiences, affiliations and memberships, or volunteer work can help showcase skills.

Tips

- Use keywords culled from the job description for which you are applying.
- Avoid personal pronouns (I, me, my).
- Use phrases instead of complete sentences or paragraphs.
- When possible, use bullet points.
- Proofread your résumé multiple times and ask someone else to proof it as well.
- When identifying your past accomplishments, emphasize and quantify your work.
- Avoid empty words such as "responsibilities included" and "duties consisted of."
- Begin phrases with an action verb.

Step 4: Create a Résumé

People seeking to advance in the same company or career field typically use a chronological résumé. MBA grads seeking to change career fields often find a functional résumé is a better way to emphasize skills and knowledge.

Transferable Skills

If you're making a career change, your résumé should emphasize transferable skills. These are skills developed in past jobs or experiences that may not be directly related to the sought-after position, but are still valuable. When developing your plan, you should have identified the skills necessary for your desired job. Make sure your résumé reflects that you possess them. Such skills include:

- Research and analysis
- Interpersonal communication
- Persuasive speaking skills
- Negotiation
- Planning, organization, meeting deadlines
- Problem solving
- Generating ideas/solutions

Step 5: Draft Cover Letters

Your cover letter is a chance to highlight your skills and accomplishments while convincing the hiring manager that you are worthy of an interview — and might be the perfect candidate for the job.

Cover Letter Tips

- Never submit your résumé without a cover letter. It is your chance to call attention to specific items on your résumé and provide more detail about your skills.
- Tailor your letter, but be brief. Cover letters should not exceed one page and should be (when possible) addressed to a specific person.
- Avoid including too many details about your work history; instead, highlight a few of your best accomplishments.
- Research the company and include something specific about the firm in your cover letter.
- If you send a hard copy, send your cover letter on the same quality and color paper as your résumé.
- Limit the number of times you use the words "I" and "me."
- Proofread your cover letter and have someone else proof it as well.

Cover Letter Content

Paragraph 1: State the position title and how you heard about it. Include something that you learned about the company when doing your research, and indicate why you want to work there.

Paragraph 2: Include one or two highlights of your education and/or experience that sets you apart from the other (possibly hundreds of other) applicants. Explain why you believe you are the best candidate for the job and how your skills align with the skills the company is seeking. If there are specific skills listed in the job description, be sure to mention them here. If specific skills are not cited, list those you think a successful employee would need.

Paragraph 3: This optional paragraph can be used to point out qualifications that have not included on your résumé, or provide detail about particular successes (for example, a relevant project you tackled on the job).

Paragraph 4: Ask for an interview. State if/when you plan to follow up. Note the best way to contact you.

Ms. Jane Doe
XYZ Company
123 Company Way
Tampa, Florida 33333

Dear Ms. Doe:

Enclosed is my resume in response to your ad for an Operations Analyst, listed on Indeed.com. I am eager to discuss this opportunity and feel I am a strong candidate for the position.

Your ad emphasizes leadership, productivity, and ability to manage change as key skills for this position. I have excelled in these areas over the course of my career and my work experience includes stints in production management, research and development, and other functional areas within operations. Having led both operational and managerial teams, I know how to change, design, and implement efficient systems appropriate for a variety of organizations.

As my resume reflects, I recently earned an MBA from the University of South Florida where research and hands-on learning are key elements of its business curriculum. Given XYZ Company's excellent reputation for cutting-edge research, I know my education and personal drive will make me an asset to your team.

Again, I am eager to learn more about this position. I will follow up with you via email next week. In the meantime, if you would like to speak before then, I can be reached at (813) 974-0000 or via email at rdbull@usf.edu.

Sincerely,

Rocky D. Bull

Rocky D. Bull

Step 6: Network and Identify Contacts

Networking is one of the most important parts of the job search. It has been said that 80% of jobs are never advertised. Applicants learn of these “hidden job opportunities” through networking.

Step 6: Build a Network

Open-ended questions (ones requiring more than a simple yes or no answer) help spark conversations. Asking questions that begin with who, what, when, where, and how open dialogue and serve as a cue for others to share more.

Build A Network

- Attend USF career events and functions, even if you are not quite ready to change jobs. Events are listed online at the Muma College of Business Office of Employer Relations website and are posted to the listserv.
- Join professional and social organizations.
- Tell everyone about your job search (family, friends, professors, fellow students, current and former co-workers). One might introduce you to a contact or company that you never considered.
- Use social media (LinkedIn, Facebook, Twitter) and start by following various USF accounts (the Muma College of Business, USF News, Career Services, etc).

Tips for Networking Events

- Arrive early and enjoy the drinks or the buffet, but don't spend too much time doing so.
- Don't dominate the conversation.
- Ask open-ended questions and show interest in others.
- Maintain eye contact and pay attention to non-verbal cues (yours and theirs).
- Avoid only talking to people you already know.
- Collect business cards from everyone you meet and jot notes on the back.

Step 7: Strengthen Interview Skills

Every job-search site or guide will tell you to dress professionally, arrive early, and bring extra copies of your résumé to the interview. Most will suggest you research the company prior to the interview and arrive prepared to ask questions about the firm. They are right, but there's more to it.

Strengthening your interviewing skills is about more than following common-sense guidelines. It is about preparing for the actual interview and the questions you should expect.

Most interviews for MBA-level jobs are behavioral interviews. Employers want to determine if you have the skills and knowledge for the job, of course, but they also want to evaluate fit with the company culture. Behavioral interviews allow employers to learn more about your actions in a particular setting and give you a chance to demonstrate your ability to be creative, learn from mistakes, and handle/manage change. Such questions give employers a glimpse into your work style as well as your communication style.

Practice answering behavioral interview questions. If you can't think of a specific work-related example, pull one from a classroom experience or volunteer work. Give honest and thorough, but concise, answers. Expect to answer a question about mistakes you have made. Describe what you learned from the experience and how you would do it differently in the future.

Typical Interview Questions

1. Tell me about yourself.
2. Why did you choose this career field?
3. Why are you a good candidate for this position and company?
4. Where do you see yourself in five years? Ten years?
5. What do you like about your current job? Dislike?

Sample Behavioral Interview Questions

1. Give me an example of when you had to juggle several different priorities at the same time.
2. What was your most significant leadership experience? What did you learn from it?
3. What was the most challenging decision you ever made?
4. Tell me about a time when you worked with a team and it didn't go well.
5. What major problem did you come across in your most recent job, and how did you solve it?
6. Tell me about a time when you had to convince someone of something and how you did it.
7. What qualities do you admire most in co-workers? In supervisors?
8. Describe a situation when you had to work with ambiguity and how you dealt with it.
9. What is your most significant professional or personal accomplishment?
10. Tell me about the best boss you've ever had. The worst?

After the Interview

Smart candidates send thank you notes or follow-up letters within 24 hours to each interviewer. Doing so not only demonstrates professionalism and courtesy, but also provides another opportunity to indicate interest in the job and your ability to communicate.

- Handwritten notes are preferred, but email notes are acceptable
- Be brief and concise, and reference specific points discussed in your meeting.
- As with a cover letter, avoid the use of the words "me" and "I."

Step 8: Evaluate and Negotiate Job Offers

Do not ask about salary unless it is mentioned by the employer first. Salary is best discussed after you receive a job offer. You should never mention a salary number or range without having done some prior research to back up your figures.

When evaluating offers, consider both monetary (salary plus other benefits) and intangible benefits.

Start by looking at the salary:

- Base salary: Ask about the firm's salary review cycle and when raises are given to determine if this is flexible, structured, or based on performance.
- Signing bonus: A one-time payment used by companies as an enticement to accept the offer, bonuses are sometimes negotiable.
- Short-term incentives: These vary according to the performance of the company, department, or individual. They are commonly in the form of cash or stock and do not affect base salary.

Step 8: Receiving An Offer

When receiving an offer, be enthusiastic and gracious, no matter what the details.

Get all of the terms so you can make an informed decision.

Ask how much time you have to evaluate the offer.

- Long-term incentives: These link the employee to the success of the company and include things like stock ownership programs.
- Insurance: The amount the employer contributes to medical and dental, as well as disability and life insurance plans can significantly boost the offer.
- Retirement/pension plans: The amounts companies contribute or match varies greatly.
- Leave: Some firms offer modest sick and holiday pay, others have generous vacation and leave plans.
- Other incentives: Many larger companies offer tuition reimbursement programs, dependent care assistance, employee assistance programs, and on-site health clubs or amenities that should be considered when evaluating offers.

Consider Intangibles:

- Business/Products: Are the company's business activities in line with your own interests and beliefs?
- Size: Does the size of the company allow for your desired career path and advancement?
- Culture: Does the management take a "hands-off" approach with its employees, or is there constant supervision?
- Public vs. Private: Is it family-owned or publicly traded? Does this make a difference to you?
- Location: How far are you willing to commute to work?
- Work/Life Balance: Does the company support and enrich employees' personal lives?
- Stability: How long has this company existed and how long is it expected to be profitable?
- Quality Management: Bad management can lead to turnovers and low employee morale.
- Prestige: Do you desire to work for a company that is a "big name" in its industry?

Evaluate the Position:

- Skills: Will this position allow you to utilize your skills?
- Interests: Is the job in line with your career goals and interests?
- Travel: Does the job require too much or too little travel?
- Work hours: Do you prefer working 40- or 50-hour weeks?
- Professional Development: Does the company allow you to grow and develop professionally?
- Autonomy: Does this company/job provide the level of autonomy that you need/desire?
- Responsibility: Does the position offer you the level of responsibility you are seeking?

Negotiate the Offer:

- Be Conversational: Make sure both you and the employer have the opportunity to talk and to be heard.
- Understand Timelines: Do not expect a resolution during the first discussion as the company will likely need time to get back to you with answers to your questions, and possibly, a revised offer.
- Be Honest: Do not imply that you have other offers unless you really do have other offers.
- Be Aware: Some companies simply do not negotiate offers.
- Be Prepared: Research ahead of time to determine if the offer is in line with industry standards for candidates with your skills and experience.
