Abstract: Telehealth has now become a popular mode of service delivery in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic, with implications for potential sustainability once the public health crisis subsides. Overall, proper implementation of telemental health services during a time of crisis can alleviate barriers to behavioral health services, creating broader access to needed services. The purpose of this study was to assess the implementation of adolescent telemental health services among Family Resources, Inc.'s staff. Results will be used to provide insight for sustaining services during a crisis, improve behavioral health service delivery and policy, and increase awareness and acceptance of telehealth services
