Overview

Behavioral health problems, like mental illness and substance abuse, are among the greatest public health challenges facing our communities. New, scientifically based treatment approaches are available to treat and prevent many of these behavioral health problems. Students will be exposed to these treatment approaches as well as to issues in the organization, financing, delivery, and outcomes of behavioral health services. The emphasis of the curricula is on practices that have been empirically validated and their delivery within the context of current funding, policies and trends. This area of academic concentration is offered as Cognate for the College of Arts and Sciences degree program in Interdisciplinary Social Sciences by the USF Department of Mental Health Law & Policy, under the college of Behavioral and Community Sciences.

Program

This Cognate in Behavioral Healthcare is available to students interested in pursuing a career in the broad field of behavioral health in conjunction with the I.S.S. program. It should be particularly beneficial to students who are interested in professions in such disciplines as human services, psychology, social work, gerontology, criminology, business, nursing, and sociology.

Students completing academic studies in Behavioral Healthcare are better prepared to begin careers in various aspects of human services. Our graduates frequently find employment in local mental health and substance abuse treatment programs. Job titles often include case managers, emergency screeners, consumer advocates, recovery specialists, and support counselors. Other students have found the program helpful to enhance their portfolio when applying for graduate school in psychology, counseling, and social work.
