APPLIED EVALUATION: DRAWING ON OUR STRENGTHS AS EDUCATORS

This presentation will explain how two Collaborative Evaluation students at the University of South Florida leveraged their professional educator experience to develop an effective evaluation plan for a local non-profit organization.

Veronica Raley spent fourteen years teaching K-12 science students and providing professional development for teachers. Rich Young taught at many US military universities throughout his military career.

Both will discuss how they used their educator experience in conjunction with the Model for Collaborative Evaluations as a framework (Rodriguez-Campos & Rincones-Gomez, 2013).

The model ensures that building trust, providing support, and teaching by example, is integrated into the evaluation design.
