Candidate Social Media Policy
College of Education
University of South Florida

It is understood that candidates might use social media and networking sites, message boards and other forums, personal websites, and blogs, but it is important to use these sites with caution to avoid damage to your reputation, the school district to which you are assigned, and/or the reputation of the College of Education and the University of South Florida.

Candidates need to set appropriate limits between their personal and public online practices. Candidates need to understand that even though one believes information posted is “private” it often becomes public without one’s consent. Candidates are encouraged to carefully review and set privacy settings and be extremely careful as to what is posted. Anonymous posts can be tracked back to the candidate and there is no such thing as a private website or post. Just because information and pictures are deleted, archival systems save deleted information and it has the potential to resurface later. And remember, it is not just what you post, but what others might post on your site. Be certain that teachers and teacher candidates are held to a much higher moral standard than the general public and persons in many other professions.

When making posts to social media and other forms of communication always be honest about your identity and never pretend to be someone else and make derogatory posts about students, school teachers and other school personnel, peers, professors, pK-12 schools, the College of Education, and/or the University of South Florida.

Candidates are discouraged from including students as “friends” or “followers” (or any other similar terms that sites might use) at the school at which he/she is assigned or has been assigned. This not only includes students to whom you are assigned, but anyone at the school. In some cases the school district will forbid it, and going against their policy will be grounds for dismissal from the school, the district, and/or the College of Education at the University of South Florida. If the school allows it, the proper procedures that the school has implemented must be followed which might mean written permission slips from parents or legal guardians.

Again, the candidate should never make posts that violate school districts policy. Further, never disclose confidential information obtained during the course of the school placement or after the placement has been concluded about students, their families, or the school district. Doing so could lead to disciplinary action by the district, including removal from the placement in the district. It is possible that an improper posting could lead to dismissal from the College of Education at the University of South Florida.
